Dear Hiring Manager,

Emirates Group — Corporate Communications, Marketing & Brand (CCM&B) — Manager Marketing Strategic Planner

I am writing to apply for the Manager Marketing Strategic Planner role within CCM&B. I want to be direct about what I bring: eleven-plus years building and running data-driven B2B commercial strategy across the GCC — not a marketing or media job title in the conventional sense, but the same underlying discipline this role is built on: turning data and market insight into standardized, defensible recommendations that multiple teams can act on consistently. I have paired that operating experience with a postgraduate qualification in Marketing and a Google Digital Marketing & E-commerce certification, deliberately, because I intend to bring this discipline into a structured marketing strategic planning capacity — and I believe CCM&B, representing one of the world's most recognized travel brands, is exactly the environment to do that in.

Much of what this role asks for, I already do in practice. I build standardized frameworks and reporting cadences — CRM-driven forecasting, structured quarterly reviews — that keep a 15-person team spread across 8 countries working to one consistent operating model rather than eight different ones, which is the same standardization problem this role solves for Strategic Planners working across regions and business units. I turn market intelligence, competitor analysis, and pricing data into go-to-market briefs and recommendations for senior stakeholders, most recently across 3 major product launches that each delivered 20–30% revenue growth in their first year. I hold direct budget accountability for a €5M annual portfolio, reporting performance and ROI to senior international leadership, including my company's Management Board in Germany — the same budget-and-returns discipline this role requires across markets and business units. And I coach and develop team members against a consistent skillset and operating model, which is the mentoring this role asks of whoever leads its Strategic Planners.

Where I am honest about the gap: my career to date has been in technical B2B channel leadership, not in media planning, marketing technology platforms such as CDPs or SFMC, or delivering global marketing campaign briefs — and I would rather say that plainly than have it surface as a surprise later. What I bring instead is a genuinely data-driven operating habit, a real marketing qualification, a Google certification earned specifically to prepare for this pivot, and a fast learning curve — the same one that took me from Sales Engineer to managing an eight-country commercial portfolio in nine years.

I work comfortably with data as a matter of habit, not preference — Power BI, Tableau, SQL, and Python are part of how I already make and defend commercial decisions — and I understand that this role expects that same rigor applied to marketing, customer, and UX data instead of sales pipeline data. I am based in Dubai, available to meet on short notice, and would welcome the opportunity to discuss directly how my operating discipline and my preparation for this specific pivot could serve CCM&B's Strategic Planning team.

Sincerely,

Yogeswara Reddy Gondesi
